Carney complex (CC) is an autosomal dominant disease characterized by the development of multiple tumors in various organs and an increased risk of cardiac myxomas and testicular lipomas. Recent reports have demonstrated that the incidence of neuroendocrine tumors is significantly higher in patients with CC than in the general population. Gastrointestinal stromal tumors (GISTs) are defined as spindle or epithelioid tumors showing KIT and/or PDGFR mutations. Although GISTs have been reported in patients with Carney syndrome and Carney triad, to date no case of CC with GISTs has been reported. Herein we present a case of a 50-year-old man who was diagnosed with CC complicated by a GIST Q. GitHub/Bitbucket "Clone or pull existing branch" question I understand that you can type in an issue number or a branch name to pull/clone a branch. However, on a pull/clone action, you have the option to select (clone) an existing branch. What does that mean? Are there branches defined for issues? A: Those are branches that already exist in the remote repo and are called upstream or upstream develop, master, feature, etc. The browser is saying that there is a branch by the name of the branch that you want to pull (which is probably the master branch in your example) that's already in the remote repo and that you want to pull from that branch. Clinicopathological analysis of equivocal prostate needle biopsy cases with respect to Gleason score: 'down-grading' or 'up-grading'? The aim of this study was to analyse the diagnostic accuracy of prostate needle biopsies by comparing the Gleason score of the last prostate cancer identified on the needle biopsy to that on radical prostatectomy specimens from the same patients and to correlate it with the clinicopathological characteristics of these patients. Tumour locations, Gleason scores and clinical stages obtained on needle
