Is it possible to keep the new tabs/windows in background in google chrome? Say I have 30 tabs open and I switch to a different view. In my main tab I click on a link, it opens a new tab and changes the URL. Can I keep the new tab open in the background after my main tab is changed? A similar question is asked in this post: How can I keep a new tab window in the background in Google Chrome? A: You can't. The new tab is a new window. Its always in the foreground. Even when you have multiple tabs in the foreground. The Portland Timbers released their new home and away jerseys today. (You're probably thinking to yourself: “Sure. The Portland Timbers have new jerseys. What else is new?”) And we’re not telling you about the jersey. The Timbers unveiled their all-new kits at the team’s unveiling party in a packed house at Providence Park. In front of about 700 fans in attendance, Timbers owner Merritt Paulson and general manager Gavin Wilkinson presented a slide show that hyped up the new uniforms. At every stop, the imagery got wilder and more scenic, with the fans behind the scenes getting ever closer and closer to the front of the jersey. By the time the presentation was finished, the fans realized that they were getting closer to the front, too. At one point, the big screen showed the logo in action. At another point, it showed the new crest. At another point, it showed the jersey in the field. At another point, it showed the centerback wearing the jersey for the first time. At another point, it showed the goalkeeper wearing the jersey for the first time. At another point, it showed the logo in motion at a game in the cloud. At another point, it showed

Here's my code: from nltk.corpus import stopwords stop_words = [x for x in stopwords.words('english')] def replace_stops(i, words): for word in words: i.replace(word, word.lower() in stop_words) I've tried to use.loc() but it didn't work. Thank you A: i.replace() is returning None because you set i = 'abc' You can fix it like this: i = i.replace(word, word.lower() in stop_words) Or just inline the replacement itself: i = i.replace(word, word.lower() in stop_words) Q: How many carbon atoms are in an ethyl group?
