Building materials, such as solids, and polymers, are widely used in the construction industry. These materials are available in a variety of forms, such as dry, dry-blended (i.e., pre-mixed), pre-mixed, and liquid, which can be used for construction projects. For example, several types of dry construction materials, including cement, are available for construction projects of different types. Typically, cement-based construction materials, such as cement, mortar, and concrete, are available in dry form and are blended with water in an on-site mixer to achieve a desired consistency, such as that required for mixing with sand, aggregate, glass, and other required components to achieve a homogeneous, lightweight, yet strong building product. Similarly, as another example, polymers may be formed into useful building materials, such as dry wall, which may be formed by painting or otherwise applying a polymeric material to a building substrate. For example, dry wall panels are typically formed from several layers of polymeric resin coated on a substrate, such as particle board or some other suitable substrate. The substrate in turn can be formed of various materials. For instance, dry wall panels of gypsum plasterboard type commonly are formed from a substrate, such as oriented strand board (OSB) and hardboard, which is coated with an appropriate polymeric resin, such as a cellulose or polyvinyl acetate resin, followed by other coating layers (e.g., an acrylic resin and a polyurethane resin). Some dry wall panels include a substrate, a coating, and an elastomeric back coat of latex containing silicone resin, such as that disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,197,107, the entire disclosure of which is incorporated herein by reference. Construction materials such as dry and liquid building materials are typically used in building projects where construction materials, such as mortar, concrete, and cement, are being poured or otherwise otherwise applied to a surface, such as a wall. This application of the construction materials, such as mortar, concrete, and cement, is typically performed by a construction worker, such as a bricklayer, tiler,
