In a speech delivered on July 11, Holder laid out the Obama administration's amoral philosophy regarding national defense: The legitimate powers of government have limits, and are not unlimited. To protect and advance liberty, both the security and the governance of the state must be subject to the rule of law and rule of law principles, including due process and equality under the law. To meet this test, the law must be equal for all. Our national defense depends on the rule of law. We cannot afford to lose the opportunity to defeat a target simply because it's inconvenient to our current laws. Our great strength comes from the rule of law – from the traditions and the values and the system of laws that unite us. Holder goes on to explain that, in America, laws are put in place to protect our individual rights. Since Americans have no rights in America, Holder argues, we shouldn't care what the law says, but rather should only respect the rule of law. In other words, the law is up to us to decide what to do in order to protect our own rights. This is simply false.

Holder could have been entirely correct if he stated that all Americans should feel free to commit atrocities. The Constitution does not say that. The Second Amendment doesn't say that. And self-defense doesn't say that. This is simple whataboutism. If we stop trusting our elected representatives to protect our individual liberties, then we are perfectly free to murder Americans. The Left would argue that it has no moral business killing people who aren't breaking any laws. But what about the Left? The Left is entirely comfortable with the Russians killing Americans. Does this not mean that the Left has a moral right to break laws? What about the Black Panthers? Where were the Panthers when Brown was shot? Where were the Panthers when Rodney King was beaten?
