C:\Users\PyW\Downloads\multilang\en_windows_xp_sp2_full.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to inspection and analysis of biological materials using magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). More specifically, the present invention relates to the use of magnetized particles to alter the T2 relaxation time constants of biological tissues. 2. State of the Art Magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) has been used for many years to provide information about the internal structure of objects of interest. The basis for MRI information is the phenomenon of nuclear magnetic resonance (NMR) wherein nuclei in a static magnetic field (B0) will tend to align themselves with this field and precess around the field at a characteristic frequency (known as the Larmor frequency. ω_0) when subjected to a constant magnetic field (B1). The frequency at which the precession will occur will depend on the magnitude of a magnetic field applied to the sample (B.sub.1). In most applications of interest, the magnitude of the magnetic field applied is usually chosen to be sufficiently strong that the effects of the field will be stronger than any stray magnetic fields and inhomogeneities in the ambient magnetic field. The magnetic field applied to the sample is normally oriented in the same direction as the main field (B.sub.0), e.g., in the x,y plane, perpendicular to the axis of the main field (B.sub.0), called the z-axis. NMR applications have been generally limited to the detection of relatively large objects such as geological formations and the like since the primary effect of the applied magnetic field is to align the nuclear spins of the nuclei in the sample along the field axis. For example, the nuclei are usually hydrogen ions in the case of MRI. However, when a sample object is subjected to an additional radio frequency (RF) magnetic field which is at the Larmor frequency. ω_0 but the direction of the RF field is perpendicular 0cc13bf012

In this process I also did not give an initializer value to the member variable _id. I have declared a variable of factory class type, and I am trying to assign an instance of that structure to that variable, but it is giving me an error.
