Evaluation of therapy-related changes in the length of the ulna. Patients with treatment-related damage to the forearm who present for initial evaluation should be evaluated for suspected growth changes that have occurred. Radiographs are rarely helpful in this evaluation. Because the ulna is the major static bone in the forearm and is relatively long, it should be evaluated for deviation and especially for changes in length and caliber. Two separate longitudinal growth patterns have been described. Ulnar deviation occurs early and is associated with an increase in the dorsal bend of the radius. Growth in length is more variable, and most likely to occur between the ages of 14 and 18 years. Both factors lead to changes in caliber, with a wider radius to ulna ratio at later ages. Normal values for ulnar length should be around a minimum of six and a maximum of 12 cm in this age group. A one-year change in ulnar length is seen in approximately 5% of normal children. We report the case of a 10-year-old boy who had sustained a closed burn injury to the arm, with no associated coagulopathy. After the injury, he had had growth arrest in the distal humerus and a short ulna at the wrist. The ulna continued to shorten at a rate of about 1 cm per year. He was also noted to have an increase in dorsal radius curvature. Radiographs at presentation showed a short ulnar length, an increased radius to ulna ratio at the wrist, a decreased olecranon fossa to olecranon fossa distance at the ulna, and some ulnar deviation. He had no pain at presentation and had a normal physical exam. His family history was negative for growth disorders. Functional limitations were observed at the elbow and wrist. This case report shows that a short ulna after any injury, trauma, or treatment to the limb may be indicative of a change in bone length, because such a change does not occur spontaneously and has the potential to cause pain and disability to the patient. In this case, the patient's short ulna and marked dorsal curvature of the radius were thought to be consistent with a regression of the distal humerus.Indium-111-chimeric monoclonal antibody fragment imaging of blood-pool antigens in patients with cancer. Metastatic patterns and pharmacokinetics of radiolabeled antibody are a major issue in antibody-based tumor imaging, as well as therapy.
